

One Medical extends public COVID-19 vaccination efforts to additional communities in partnerships with departments of public health

January 12, 2021

High-priority populations will begin receiving vaccinations in New York, Los Angeles, Seattle, and the San Francisco Bay Area, with other regions anticipated soon

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12, 2021 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- One Medical, (NASDAQ: ONEM) a leading human-centered and technology-powered primary care organization, today announced it is continuing to expand its COVID-19 vaccination efforts nationwide, now offering support for community vaccinations in New York City, Los Angeles, Seattle, and the greater San Francisco Bay Area, with plans for more geographies soon.

With limited quantities of vaccines currently being provided by local departments of public health, One Medical is administering doses to Phase 1a and select Phase 1b populations in accordance with guidance from local, state and federal health officials. One Medical is also providing complimentary telehealth services to qualifying patients referred by departments of public health during the course of vaccination services, leveraging One Medical's technology platform for vaccine appointment scheduling, second dose vaccine reminders, digital health follow up through video chats and messaging, and data reporting.

Beginning this week, One Medical is dedicating a location in Los Angeles to administer vaccines to those referred from the Los Angeles County Department of Public Health. Similar public support efforts are underway in Northern California, where One Medical is working directly with the San Francisco Department of Public Health and other Bay Area county health departments. In New York City and Seattle's King County, One Medical is also planning to soon administer COVID-19 vaccinations to qualified populations from the general public in accordance with guidance from departments of public health.

"With a modernized technology platform, multi-market streamlined operations, and dedicated providers and team members, One Medical is pleased to partner with public health leaders across the nation to serve communities with COVID-19 vaccine administration and digital health support," said One Medical Chair & CEO, Amir Dan Rubin.
